Hot summer in Shanghai

JULY is set to become Shanghai's hottest month since records began.

Just two more days with temperatures over 35 degrees Celsius and the number of high temperature days will have beaten the 23 recorded in July 1934.

The Xujiahui weather station was built to monitor temperatures in 1873. Shanghai has already beaten the record for its hottest day - that was on last Friday when the official temperature was 40.6 degrees.

The hot weather is set to continue into August with temperatures possibly reaching 40 degrees. But there may be some relief after August 7, which is liqiu or autumn begins in the Chinese calendar.

Structural tax cuts boost economic vitality

China's latest efforts to implement structural tax cuts will benefit its economic restructuring and promote steady growth, analysts have said.

Starting from Aug 1, value-added tax (VAT) reforms, which replace the turnover tax with a value-added duty in transport and some service sectors, will expand nationwide from the current 12 provinces and municipalities to further reduce tax burdens on businesses.

Also effective on Aug 1, China will suspend the VAT and turnover tax for small businesses with monthly sales of less than 20,000 yuan ($3,236), which will benefit more than six million small companies and boost employment and income for tens of millions of people.

Due to the VAT reforms, started from 1st Aug, all air & ocean freight and import & export local charges, will also be added 6% to 7% VAT (according to carrier) on top of the total amount, and if there's any other additional taxes then will be checked case by case.
